the doubtful voters elsewhere.

It is a real campaign that is being waged here. Whatever apathy may have existed in the earlier days, these closing hours of the fight find the people aroused to the issues and the fact that the eyes of the country are upon them. Moreover, they have had no chance to remain apathetic, for political spell-binders have been haranguing them by night and individual party workers besieging them by day.

Red Fire and Brass Bands.

It is an old-fashioned campaign with red fire and brass bands and all that sort of thing. Remember the old torchlight procession, when the boys turned out with flambeaux and their ollcloth capes and helmets? That's it; and they sing "Rally 'Round the Flag,

The half-and-half principle of appro priations for the District of Columbia has been retained in the appropriation act covering the present fiscal year. This is the most important fact con nected with the legislation and appropriations of the session of Congress just

For weeks, while the bill was in preparation in the House committee, and later when the appropriation bill passed the lower body without the usual half-and-half clause, there was immi nent danger that the National Capital would be left without the support o the federal government vouchsafed to it in the organic act of 1876.

The first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress opened with the District waiting with interest the report of the joint select committee of Congress which had been appointed by the prerious Congress to study into the finanvious Congress to study into the man-cial relation between the United States and the District of Columbia. The re-port was made January 6. It did not specifically recommend that the half-and-half principle be retained in ap-propriation bills, but at the same time upheld the main contention of the Dis-trict of Columbia that the National Capital is not undertaxed. "Our unanimous conclusion," says the

the District should be fixed and certain; that the Congress should pursue a definite policy of regular and liberal appropriations, having in view not only the permanent moral and physical advancement of the city, but also the preeminent beauty and grandeur as the municipal expression of the nation's home and its people's pride."

The committee recommended an inheritance tax for the District of Columbia also, but no legislation carrying out the recommendations of the, committee has been introduced into Congress. Senator Works, a member of the committee, submitted a minority report and introduced a bill in the Senate carrying out his idea that the District of Columbia should be changed from a municipality to a bureau of the federal government and operated as such.
